ABSTRACT

This study investigates the relationship between Islamic work ethics and organizational commitment. In this study, Islamic work ethics was treated as independent variables, organizational commitment as a dependent variable. A questionnaire survey of 63 employees working in Jawwal Telecommunication Company in Palestine.

The reliability analysis show that the Cronbach's Alpha value for all the variables under study were satisfactorily acceptable except for normative commitment (.542). Due to a very low reliability for normative commitment, the item was removed from the study and was not considered for further analysis. The descriptive analysis of the variables especially the mean value for Islamic Work Ethics, affective commitment and continuance commitment (where the responses were tapped on the 5 point likert scale) were all above moderate and towards agreement. However, the results from correlation analysis show no significant relations between Islamic Work Ethics and Organizational Commitment.
ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

All praise and gratitude be given to Allah the Almighty for giving me such a great strength, patience, courage, and ability to complete this project.

Although any learning activity is a lonely personal project, it requires help, support and encouragement of others to be successful. Just as an eagle could not soar without the invisible strength of the wind, I could not have arrived at this place without all the invisible hands that provided me that strength. I would like to present my humble appreciation and gratefulness to all the people who made this journey possible. I am in debt to those who knowingly and unknowingly were so helpful and important in the difficult moments.

My deepest appreciation goes to Dr. Norsiah Mat who has provided unlimited amount of encouragement and professional support. She valued my commitment to self and lifelong learning and all the while supporting my professional endeavors. Thank you, Dr. Norsiah, for your always-positive attitude and outlook; you are an incredible supervisor and an outstanding leader.

I wish to thank several individuals my friends who have provided expertise, encouragement, and assistance in the accomplishment of this educational endeavor. When I say I couldn’t have done it without their help, I am not simply passing on a trite compliment; I mean it!
I will not forget to thank my doctors, for proof reading assignments, talking out ideas, providing technical and psychological assistance, and for guiding and supporting my efforts to succeed in this program.

Above all I would like to express my gratitude to my parents, brothers and sisters for their endless love and warm support that they have given me all throughout of my life. They are the heroes for their psychological and economical support.

CHAPTER 1

INTRODUCTION

1.1 INTRODUCTION

Today's management paradigms are becoming more human-oriented. Organizations need their employees to contribute their creativity, ideas, and opinions to various issues to improve overall production quality. Employees may be instructed, even forced to do their job, however, nobody can force another person to pursue their dreams and passions in a normal work situation. Developing creative ideas and finding passion for one's work requires personal responsibility (Peters & Waterman, 1982). Covey (1997) argued that it is possible to purchase man power but it is not possible to purchase employees' hearts, minds, and souls. Nowadays, the most important resources of an organization are employees' intelligence and abilities (Marshall, 2000). In order for any organization to utilize the intelligence and the productivity of personnel, the employees must feel a sense of belonging to the organization.

Employees play an important role in achieving organizational targets; therefore, analysis of their psychological characteristics and the impact of these on the organization is crucial. Organizational commitment, in particular, has been a major field of study in recent years.

Numerous studies have shown that organizational commitment predicts important variables, including absenteeism, organizational citizenship, performance, and turnover (e.g., Mathieu and Zajac, 1990; Morrow, 1993; Wright and Bonett, 2002). Colbert and
