CHAPTER 1
INTRODUCTION

1.1 Introduction

Strategy and the formulation of strategy play an important part in the firms' management process. The strategy gives the direction that a firm has in mind and in which way they want to achieve their goals. Earlier research demonstrated that firms that set out a clear strategy, for example a quality differentiation or a cost leadership strategy will outperform those firms that deploy a mixed strategy (Baum et al., 2001). The Managing Director plays an important and perhaps a crucial role in firm when it comes to the formulation of a firm's strategy. The Managing Director competitive development and personal goals determine the understanding and use of strategic management and planning (Postma and Zwart, 2001). The strategy is often strongly influenced by the distinct competencies and unique knowledge of the Managing Director. Strategy and strategic vision create a clear direction for the company and this proves to be an important input for firm policy and operational decisions (Philipsen and Kemp, 2003). The Managing Director is usually the person who has the vision. Often, this vision is not disseminated throughout the organisation. Nevertheless, the businesses will probably have a better performance if they set up a clear strategy and if that strategy is dispersed throughout the organisation. With a clear and communicated strategy, employees can take decisions with that strategy in mind. Which strategy leads to the best performance for firms? According to the contingency theory, the optimal strategy of a firm depends on many factors, for example availability of qualified employees and other resources (external factors), quality of the current employees and the goals and strategic behavior of the business owner (both internal factors). Also sustainable competitive advantages are often referred to as important determinants for the selection of the strategy. These factors differ largely between firms. For this reason it is not possible to derive one most favorable strategy for a certain group of firms. Each company has to find its own optimal strategy, which is determined by the external and internal factors of the firm. This theory
