ABSTRACT

International assignments are increasingly important for Multinational companies, Intel sending employees on relocation for product transfer and for training purpose. It is important for the management to understand how the employees being adapting to the host environment.

This research aim to explore the relationship between the independent variable that is cross cultural adjustment and dependent variables are job satisfaction, family factor and cultural training. The research involved Penang Design Centre employees, most of the survey questions being sent through internal mail, email and fax. A total of 130 survey questions were distributed to respondents. Only 104 sets of questionnaires had been received. Hypotheses testing method were employed and questionnaire with five point Likert scale was used to collect the data. Data were analyzed through Pearson correlation and multiple regression analysis. The results shown those three hypotheses that were developed in this research are accepted. The results from multiple regression analysis suggest that the more tailored and relevant cultural training the more expectation were met. Recommendations, limitations and future research were offered in this research.

The results from this study encourage management to develop programmes that will ensure expatriate have realistic expectations prior to their global assignments
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Thank GOD for giving me the opportunity, strength and good health to complete this research. Thanks so much for the blessing. I am heartily thankful to my Supervisor Pn. Norizan Haji Azizan whose supervision and support from the preliminary to the concluding level enabled me to develop an understanding of the subject. I am grateful to my mother and father who had been quietly praying for me to go through ups and downs in my life. I have been greatly indebted to my husband Ananthakumar KV Nair and my son Keeshen Kumar for being very understanding when I need to switch the role from wife and mother to student. Without their understanding and motivation I will not be able to complete my study smoothly. I am very grateful to my mother in law Sumathy Amma who has been very supportive and helpful when I was taking this Master program. I also share the credit of my work with my brothers and sister. My sincere thanks go to my Intel colleagues, Lectures from University Utara Malaysia and family members who directly or indirectly involved in helping me to complete this research. I would like to thank all the survey respondents who helped me filled out the survey on time. Finally thanks to Intel for giving me the opportunity to take the Master program at Intel. Thank You and God Bless everyone.

CHAPTER 1
INTRODUCTION

1.1 Introduction to the study

An expatriate is a person who lives or works outside of his or her own home country on a non-permanent basis (Andreason, 2003; Ward, Bochner & Furnham, 2001). While a wide range of research findings support expatriate adjustment as a multi-faceted phenomenon (Bhashkar-Shrinivas, Harrison, Shaffer, & Luck, 2004), research on coping and expatriate adjustment may be hampered by an inadequate examination of social support (Ong & Ward, 2005). As international travelers, expatriate workers must adapt to new living and working conditions and research continues to explore the factors associated with their successful, or failed, adjustment. Employees who are sent to another country with a specific purpose to accomplish a job-related assignment are generally referred to as expatriates (Sinangil & Ones, 2001).

Business has become more increasingly international; expatriates play a significant role in the global strategies of many organizations by filling a skill gap in a foreign business operation, transferring management expertise or corporate culture, starting new operations and coordinating global activities (Black, Brown and Hazing 2004). Global mobility is a reality and a necessity in today’s international business environment (punnet, 1997). To be able to effectively compete against major global competitors, international firms need world class managers in the international market place (Harvey, 1997). When going for abroad assignment means of meeting a different way of life then in own country, assignees needs to perform in an unfamiliar work. It could be a
