ABSTRACT

The purpose of this study is to examine the relationship between components of organizational commitment and job satisfaction among employees in the private sector. Therefore, this study could make important contributions to extant research in management and organizational behavior. In the beginning of this study, the purpose, research question, and the need for the study are given. Then, literature is discussed about organizational commitment and job satisfaction focusing on the relationship between them. The study generated a 100 percent response rate from 125 respondents. The result from Multiple Regression Analysis showed that affective commitment has a significant positive relationship with job satisfaction. However, continuance and normative commitment have no significant relations with job satisfaction. The overall model or the coefficient determination was quite high, R Square of 40.5%.

Key words: Affective commitment, continuance commitment, normative commitment, job satisfaction.

Besides that, if managed properly employee commitment can lead to beneficial consequences such as increased effectiveness, performance, and productivity, and decreased turnover and absenteeism at both the individual and organizational levels (Fiorita, Bozeman, Young and Meurs, 2007). An employee who is satisfied with his job would perform his duties well and be committed to his job, and subsequently to his organization. Thus, it is of utmost importance for employers to know the factors that can affect their employees' job satisfaction level since it would affect the performance of the organization as well (Awang, Ahmad and Zin, 2010).

In the eyes of employees they believes that they have done a lot for their organization and they also have emotional involvement in their organization. However, their management has very little involvement in their growth and development of employees.
