CHAPTER 1
INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background of Study.

In a rapidly changing global business environment in which innovation, speed, and efficiency are often necessary for success, organization must constantly work to upgrade and enhance employees’ skills (Ford & Steve, 1997). However, the role and perceived important of training as means to improved performance in organization has grown over time. Training is also plays as important role to provide employees the knowledge and skill needed to do a particular task or job.

Training starts as soon as a new employee is hired for particular post by an organization. The recruitment and selection process ensures that the employee hired fulfills the selection criteria, which means that the particular employee must have the qualifications, knowledge, skills and capabilities set by the organization. Therefore, the employee must be given training as soon as he joins the organization. Training typically involves providing employees the knowledge and skill needed to do a particular task or job, though attitude change may also be attempted.

Training has long been an issues for organizations that exist especially to the non profit sector. Time and expenses are the main issues that consistently surface in any discussion of non profit training needs. Its also give an impact to the smaller agencies to a much greater degree than larger organizations because to implement any training is costly and not totally will be beneficial to applied by the employee itself.
