CHAPTER 1
INTRODUCTION

1.1 Background of Study

Corporate Social Responsibilities is a voluntary assumption idea where the companies took the obligation beyond its legal responsibility and also absolutely economic (Sen and Bhattacharya, 2001; Boatright, 1997). McWilliam and Siegel (2001) describe CSR as “action that appear to further some social good, beyond the interest of the firm and that which is required by law”. Meanwhile, European Commission, 2011 has release CSR new definition as;

....Society impact by enterprises responsibilities...an integrated social process, consumer concern, human right, environmental and ethical concerns in core strategy and business operations and close collaboration with stakeholders ....to increase the shared value creation for both stakeholder and shareholder and also large number of society: identifying, mitigating and preventing their possible adverse impacts.

The CSR aim is to be responsible on behalf of company action and providing its communities, consumers, environment, employees and other stakeholders a positive impact (De la Cuesta and Valor, 2003). According to Maignan and Ferrel, 2004; Lafuente, Vinuales, Pueyo and Llaria, 2003; Nieto and Fernandez, 2004 cited in Bigne, Andreau, Chumpitaz and Swaen (2006), they underlining that the significance of CSR concept has been an ongoing process for practical and academic writing to considered the interest and popularity from both perspective. Continually, new hypothetical ideas are situated up, endeavours to characterize CSR are embraced and more common sense contemplations are being talked about. Organizations spurred by interest organization, stakeholders, regulators, purchasers and governments, are spreading their activities with a growing concern
