INTRODUCTION

1.1 Introduction

A satisfied employee can be vital source for an organisation’s competitive advantage. At this period of time, most managers find it difficulties to misplace the issue due to expectation for satisfied working environment is rapidly increasing. For this reason, every employer has a moral responsibility by providing satisfying working atmosphere to their employees in order to gaining an organisational’s competitive advantage.

1.2 Background of the Study

The study on job satisfaction was started by Locke in the year 1976. Locke, E.A. (1976) in ‘The Nature and Causes of Job Satisfaction’ defines job satisfaction as a pleasurable feeling from the employees which derived from the way of appraisal process conducting on their delegated job.

Determining the level of job satisfaction is not a new way in managing employees, because it is a tool in retaining the level of employees’ performance. In order to retain employees’ level of performance, it is employer responsibility to create the sources for it and the employees also need to drastically move forward to grab what job satisfaction sources has offered. There were many considerable factors that create and influenced job satisfaction among employees.

Spector (1997) in ‘Job Satisfaction: Application, assessment, causes and consequences’, listed down 13 dimension towards achieving the level of job satisfaction among employees which is appreciation, communication, co-workers, fringe benefits, job conditions, nature of the work, organization, personal growth, policies and procedures, promotion opportunities, recognition, security, and supervision.

Noe Hollenbeck, Genhart and Wright (2012) in ‘Human Resource Management: Gaining a competitive advantage’, summarised Spector’s list and highlighted four main job satisfaction dimensions which more contributing towards employees’ performance. There is promotion, salary, performance appraisal system and training and developmental programme. Researcher hereby believes that, the above dimensions would have a moral relationship between employees’
